THIRTY-ONE YEARS LATE

Chicago Professor Who Left Home One Morning In 1875 Comes Back In 1906.

"ASK NO QUESTIONS," HE SAYS

Children Who Waited For Papa to Come to Supper Are Middle Aged and Married When He Arrives.

Vanished in 1875 without explanation, returned in 1906 without explanation—that is the record just established by Professor Charles H. Frye, formerly of the Chicago Normal school staff, who recently returned home after an absence of thirty-one years. Last week Mr. Frye went back to the present dwelling of his wife, Mrs. Clara Frye, 870 Bosworth avenue, Chicago, entering as though he had merely been around the corner to post a letter instead of returning from a worldwide wandering extending over nearly one-third of a century.

"How are you, Clara?" was all that Mr. Frye said when his wife opened the door of the flat in which she lives. Mrs. Frye gave a shriek of surprise and then fell into the arms of her husband. Mr. Frye was excessively cool.

"Nothing to get excited about," he said. "And remember that I don't want to be bothered with questions as to where I was. Here is $5,000, but you must not fire a whole lot of interrogation marks at me."

Mr. Frye produced a large roll of bills and peeled off $5,000, which he handed to his wife. Mrs. Frye took them and acquiesced in the arrangement not to cross examine him, whereupon a veil of mystery was drawn over the traveler's experience. The only information that he has vouchsafed thus far is that he was in foreign lands and that he made a lot of money in the Philippines. Now he has come home to enjoy himself.

Mr. Frye was just thirty-one years old when he disappeared, his age now being sixty-two. At the time he left Chicago he held an important position in the Normal school. He had a happy home, with a wife and three children, two daughters and a son, all of whom are living in Chicago.

"NOTHING TO GET EXCITED ABOUT," HE SAID.

In 1875, on a night memorable in the annals of the Frye family, the head of the house did not return to dinner. The little family waited the meal for some time and finally sat down to table.

"Father probably will be in soon," said Mrs. Frye to her children.

It came just thirty-one years later. Mrs. Frye returned to find both his daughters married and his son a middle-aged business man.

Mr. Frye's reticence to his family about his experiences during the thirty-one years was extended to the public in even more emphatic style.

"Mr. Frye cannot be seen, and he will not tell any old paper or the public either where he has been or what he has been doing, so there," was the message delivered to a throng of newspaper men at Mrs. Frye's residence.

Dutch Fortifications.

The principal defense of the Dutch in the war with Alva was found in the character of their country. Small bastions, long curtain walls and very wide ditches filled with water were the characteristics of a Dutch fortification.

HIS OWN TINTYPE GIVES HIM A FIT

Sailor Kicks Photographer's Camera to Bits and Magistrate Up-holds Him.

Gesset Tenani, weighing somewhere near 300 pounds, is a sailor on the L'Etolle, which was recently lying in the North river, New York.

He had a day off and proceeded uptown to Fort George, where he came across a store outside of which was a young woman lustily inviting passers-by to "come inside and have your picture taken."

This appealed to Tenani, and he went. He went through the posing born of a Frenchman and after waiting ten minutes was handed a tintype. No sooner had Gesset taken one look at the picture than he fell to the floor, with a groan. Policeman Merritt rushed into the establishment and proceeded to render "first aid to the injured," as all the symptoms were identical.

RE-FELL TO THE FLOOR WITH A GROAN.

with those of apoplexy. Eventually the Frenchman showed signs of recovering, and the policeman left the place. Merritt had not been gone more than two minutes before he was called in again by the woman, who told him that Tenani had kicked the camera to pieces.

Merritt, after a struggle, arrested Tenani and arraigned him in Harlem court.

Tenani, through the court interpreter, said that when he paid 25 cents to have his picture taken they gave him a "monstrosity."

"I will fine you $10," said Magistrate Cornell.

When this was translated to Tenani, he appeared on the verge of a faint.

"It says it was awful," said Interpreter Dumas to Magistrate Cornell.

The picture was passed up to Magistrate Cornell, who, after taking one glance at it, said excitedly: "Great Caesar, you are discharged! It was justified."

LIGHTNING HITS SAME MAN TWICE

Paralyzed by First Bolt, He Is Killed In Wife's Arms by the Second.

While tacking down a carpet with his wife and baby in their home, however Denman, aged twenty-three, residing near Larue, O., was paralyzed by a thunderbolt which descended the chimney. Mrs. Denman and the baby, Annabel, aged two years, were knocked down by the same bolt, falling beneath a table.

"For God's sake, little girl, save me if you can," gasped Denman to his wife. With a supreme effort the woman half dragged and half carried him to the doorway, where she thought the fresh air might revive him.

"I feel better now," Denman muttered, when a second bolt crashed through the roof of the little home, striking him dead in his wife's arms.

Mrs. Denman was rendered unconscious by the shock. Both mother and babe will recover.

Lace In a Lost of Bread.

A novel case of smuggling at New York was recently reported to Acting Secretary of the Treasury Reynolds. There arrived at the New York post office a neat package with the Brussels postmark on it. As is customary in such cases, the addressee was notified to call for the package, which was to be opened in the presence of a customs officer. When the strings were cut out rolled a loaf of bread, beautifully browned. The suspicious of the inspector were at once aroused, and, breaking open the loaf, he found several hundred dollars' worth of expensive lace wrapped in oil silk.

Chased Half a Mile by Snake.

Chased by a big black snake through briars and underbrush for over half a mile was the terrifying experience of Mrs. Calie Elder and Mary and Kate Baker, near Livermore, Pa., who were picking blackberries on a hill. Shortly after reaching the berry patch they saw the snake coiled among the branches of a scrub oak and apparently sleeping. One of the girls hurled a stone into the bush, when the reptile immediately dropped to the ground and pursued them, never stopping until the railroad was reached. The snake, the women assert, was fully eight feet long.

Dog Saves Master From Fire. Max Freundlich, dozing in his shop in Buffalo, was awakened by his coach dog tugging at his shoulders. The shop was filled with dense smoke. Escape by the stairs was cut off, and Freundlich was taken from a second story window with the dog in his arms.

ELEVATOR A WOMAN'S CELL

Shut Up Twenty-four Hours In Car, Mrs. Boden Was Near Death From Fright.

NO ONE KNEW SHE WAS THERE

Neighbor Suspected Something Was Wrong When He Saw Milk Outside House and Called Cop to the Rescue.

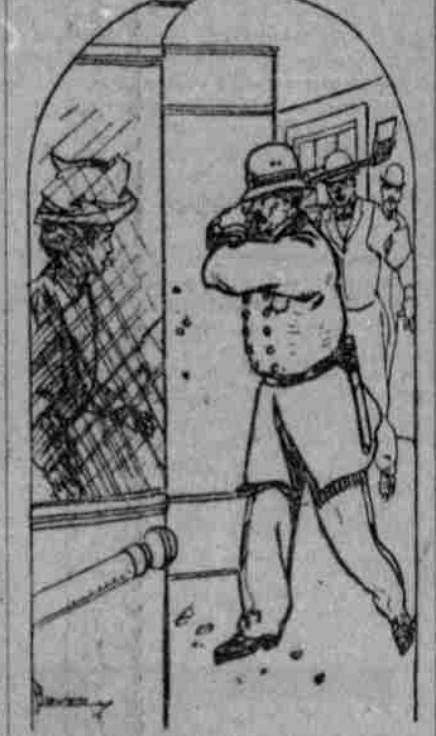

For twenty-four hours Mrs. J. F. Boden, housekeeper for Ranker George A. Huhn, was imprisoned in an elevator in the Huhn mansion, sixteenth and Walnut streets, Philadelphia, without food or water. By a fortunate circumstance a friend of the family, a society man who knew that Mrs. Boden had twice been caught in the elevator for a short time when the family was at home, noticed that the milk and bread were still on the steps at 7 o'clock at night. He went to a telephone and called up the house, but got no answer, which convinced him that something was wrong with the housekeeper.

He reported the case to the Fifth district police station, advising that the house was broken into immediately. The sergeant at first thought of sending a hook and ladder company, but he was afraid that would create too much excitement in the neighborhood, so he sent Patrolman Quinn instead.

Under the guidance of the man who had given the information and was familiar with the house, Quinn crawled from the roof of an adjoining house over a narrow cornice to the Huhn house.

After slamming shut the door of the elevator as she was on her way to bed at 10 o'clock on the previous night, Mrs. Boden had been unable to open it again. She tried all the doors, but they were all stuck fast.

Running the elevator to the top floor, Mrs. Boden sat down to think, and her thoughts were not pleasant. She might QUINN BROKE OPEN THE DOOR WITH AN AX, have screamed herself hoarse without any one hearing her. Once she did shriek, but the echoes in the big house frightened her, and she kept quiet after that.

She slept doubled up on the floor of the elevator and spent a dismal day trying to find a comfortable position in her cramped quarters. When Quinn broke open the door with an ax and lifted her out she was completely exhausted from hunger and fright.

"It's a good thing that you are here," she said to the man who had figured out the situation from the milk bottle and the loaf of bread, "or I would have died here."

Mrs. Boden returned to leave the house and said she felt all right after eating a meal and drinking water.

GLEANINGS.

The cone of Vesuvius is to be strengthened by hydraulic works to mitigate the effects of future eruptions. The Swiss hotels serve the table d'hôte with military precision. When a course once passes it is gone forever. From the 1st of February until the last day of May from fifty to a hundred tons of flowers are shipped to Penzance every week from the "flower arms" of the Scilly Isles.

Bachelors have a difficult time in Korea. They may not vote, they may not buy liquor, and the first question a man is asked on applying for a job is, "How many children have you?"

The burgomaster of Hagen, who is a medical man, recently proposed to name two new streets after Koch and Behring. The proposition was carried, but it was pointed out that the thoroughfares ended at the local cemetery, and the resolution was rescinded.

She worried and she fretted, And grew as homely as could be. But now she is a famous beauty.
